

MEDICAL DEGREE

ASSESSMENT OF THE ACADEMIC YEAR 2008/09

UNIVERSITY OF MINHO
School of Health Sciences
Medical Education Unit

Introduction

This Descriptive Summary presents a detailed analysis of the 2008/09 edition of the undergraduate Medical Degree in the School of Health Sciences of the University of Minho. It is a compilation produced as part of the internal processes of quality evaluation to inform improvements. The primary objective is that of increasing the accountability of each edition of the Medical Degree.

The report provides evidence on the quality of the school's undergraduate medical program. It is sustained by a permanent and systematic process of gathering and organization of data operating from the Medical Education Unit. The dimensions addressed are student academic performance, the results of the student evaluations of the undergraduate program (curricular areas, faculty, clerkships and seminars) and the essential demographic elements of the entering class for 2007-2008. The MEU is responsible for the included comments, which take into consideration the final year reflections of the School's Scientific Council. The Descriptive Summary has been developed for inclusion in the School's annual report to the Deanery of the University (Year 2009).

In the academic year of 2008-2009, important adjustments were implemented in the Medical Degree, as a consequence of the experience and the deliberations produced in the previous year. The success rates, the evaluations collected from students and the external mechanisms of accountability employed testify for a most positive experience.

The main objective of a Medical School is to graduate doctors who practice effectively in reducing the burden of illness and improving the health of their communities. In Portugal, year 6 in the Medical School is broadly equivalent to a junior internship year. Therefore, student achievements in year 6 can be regarded as an indicator of the effectiveness of Medical Schools, which are responsible for selecting only those with potential to be professionally competent during the previous 5 years. The success rate of the clinical clerkships ("residências") offered in health care institutions as part of the 6th year (98 and 100%) and the fact that an expressive percentage of students feel that the learning experience contributed to their "personal development" (98 and 96%) are important indicators that students were prepared for playing the junior intern role and that the learning experience was organized adequately. In addition, the unequivocally positive assessment scores of the "professionalism" and "clinical skills" issued by local supervisors testify the technical and professional attitude of the future graduates of Minho.

The international literature is very clear about the duty of Medical Schools to be rigorous with their assessment programs, for the sake of all future patients. The academic performance of Minho's Medical Students suggests that the assessment mechanisms in place are producing the intended results. Overall, results indicate high success rates and highest difficulties for first year students, as should be expected, given the fact that the transition to higher education - and in particular, to a medical School - is fraught with specific difficulties. Taking into consideration the myriad of dimensions that influence first year student success in higher education, it is difficult to consider the quality that students perceive in courses and Faculty, which might be inferred from the Student Evaluations of Teaching presented in this document. In a nutshell, the extremes for the figures for academic success in curricular years (minimum of 86% and maximum of 100%) and for the satisfaction with the contribution of each curricular unit for personal development (minimum of 69% and maximum of 96%) indicate adequate levels of performance for the academic program. In what student ratings of faculty, very positive appreciations suggest the quality and commitment of faculty is clearly perceived by students. This is one of the major achievements of the school, both in campus and in the clinical workplaces where students learn the practice of medicine.

The very positive performance of Minho's students and the very favourable student appreciations of the program are cornerstones in what concerns benchmarking the innovations in Medical Education developed at the School of Health Sciences of the University of Minho.
